

Story Plan for Journalism

My story plan would be to interview people and talk to freshman, specifically, but also some upperclassmen and ask them about was it better to have 1,2,3, or any number of roommates. Or would you have liked it better if you lived by yourself? I'll ask them about what were your initial thought when applying for housing before freshman year started?

If you knew you wanted roommates, did you want them to be people you already knew or random people? Would you want to have a roommate that is a lot like you or someone who isn't like you? Pros Cons?

What have been some crazy stories so far with roommates in college? If you knew some of these things would happened before would you have made a different decision?

-If you knew you wanted a single room, why do you think that would be better? Would there be cons there too?

-What would some pros be for a room with 3 or 5 roommates? Are there any pros with having a single room? How about cons?

Interview:

Freshman Men and Women, get their input on the questions.

Find other Men and Women, who are not freshman.

Maybe contact someone in University or Private Housing and ask them what most freshman want. Also ask them what are some freshman's concerns about living with a lot of people? Ask about are some freshman worried about having a weird random roommate?

This would be a good article for any incoming freshman at any university because people want to know what other people are thinking and get accounts on what may be better.
