

DINING HALLS

At the University of Illinois in Urbana Champaign, it's no secret that freshmen face difficulty in finding not only time, but a place to eat throughout the day. While there are many options, students are faced with a lot of inconvenience. With late class hours, various activities, and work schedules, it's not always easy for students to find a place to eat a substantial meal. With dining halls closing at times such as 6:30, students struggle with being able to find a place to eat if they have late classes, work, or clubs that night. While there are other options a couple blocks away, it's not safe to be alone walking at night in order to get a meal. In addition, it's difficult to balance school work as well when you're traveling multiple blocks in order to get dinner.

For those who are working in the dining halls up until closing, how are these students supposed to have a chance to eat? Struggles come to all students in this regard, proving difficulty for a multitude of students, mainly freshmen, across campus.

PEOPLE TO INTERVIEW:

Thomas Hoftiezer, a student working in the dining halls

Maria Velazquez, a student working in the dining halls

Yessica Dominguez, a student working in the dining halls

OTHERS WHO CAN BE ASKED:

Students with late classes

Students with activities that run late

The University's perspective on why these times are set the way they are

QUESTIONS:

Why do times run along when they do?

What time do your shifts end?

How long is your latest activity?

When is your latest class?

Are these times inconvenient for studying?