One ATMS 140 professor has been replaced following a dispute with a Division of Rehabilitation and Education Services after a student was not provided with electronic notes.

Professor Michael Schlesinger's status with the University is unknown, however he claimed in an interview with Inside Higher Ed that he is on paid administrative leave, pending a hearing.

The student was not provided with notes, because Schlesinger did not want to give one student a advantage. However, he did offer to pay for a note taker.

Schlesinger has also contacted students in the course following his absence, despite claiming he was not allowed to.

He prefaced his emails about the end of NASA's Cassini Spacecraft, by saying: "Although the University has forbidden me to communicate with you, on pain of ???, I am,"
