

For my story on laundry situations in different dorms so far, I have interviewed two students living in LAR about the conditions in that community. The view on having to pay for laundry is very negative, but those who have laundry rooms where they do not have to pay view their laundry facilities in a very positive light.

I plan to - for the next part, which will be the bulk of my interviews - interview many freshman students living in pay-for-laundry residence halls like Bromley. After, I want to interview those who are in charge of these pay for laundry residence halls and ask why they are run as they are. I can already imagine that students are very upset about paying for laundry, and will probably in turn view the laundry facilities in a negative light due to this. Someone I interviewed in LAR said they'd go home to do their laundry, so I would hope to interview someone who actually does this due to having to pay for laundry in their residence halls.