Possible headline: "the weather outside really isn't that frightful"

- students from areas that aren't traditionally that cold say that they don't fear the weather that much

- students have experienced cold weather before, but just haven't lived in it

- think that people over exaggerate how cold it really is

- haven't prepared much for winter, planning on doing it over thanksgiving

Aaron Gould- "I've been on vacations before for skiing, i mean the most was three days, but I can't see how its that bad livnig in it.

Celine Chuapocco- "I moved from Chicago to California, and honestly I don't remember the winters being as bad as people describe it."

Lyndon Wise- "When I tell people that I'm from Texas they will always end up asking "so have you ever had winter? The winters up here are terrible."

Plan on getting more interviews with people from various areas and ask more about if they think people exaggerate the weather.
