

I have interviewed a few people so far. They have all been vegan students that eat in the dining hall. I talked to a student, Miranda, while I was getting a bagel. She was telling me about the “Vegan Corner” dining halls have. She said it was very convenient because they have vegan cream cheese and fake sandwich meat and cheese. Unlike many others may think, Miranda was happy with the options the dining hall provided. The Vegan Corner also happened to be gluten free, so the dining halls are trying to adhere to different types of dietary restrictions. She was an important person to talk to because she gave a more positive outlook on the dining halls and that it is a lot easier to be vegan than maybe expected.

I also talked to 2 students where one student was showing the other around the dining hall and they stopped at the vegan corner as well. That particular day did not have many vegan options other than the vegan corner so they were a little disappointed but they still had options to eat. This was an important interview because they were kind of in that gray area of being grateful for the dining hall options and being a little disappointed.
