Richard Harris Presentation

On Thursday, NPR journalist Richard Harris spoke at Spurlock museum. Harris talked about his books, his achievements, and knowledge of an array of subjects. Harris presented his speech at Spurlock museum because of the world cultures presented in the museum, as well as his knowledge of traveling all over the world. Harris has covered the climate change, and has traveled in places ranging from Rio de Janeiro to Copenhagen. Harris talked about how funding in scientific research is declining, and is becoming less reliable. He spoke about his book, Science Friction, and the theme of “what’s slowing progress in research”. He examined many facts and showed diagrams of research funding.
